Additional Explanations and Abbreviations

- Anglian Type= local variety of 18th cent pipes (Types 10-12G). The bowl outline is more oval, bowls are thick even to the end of the 18th cent. Stems also tend to be thick and in the earlier part of the century the clay is yellowish or grey.
- Broseley Types
Atkinson subdivides the main types in his 'Broseley pipes' adding a, b, and c etc to the main divisions.
- Pegges Notes
~~Refer~~ These are referred to as Mss by O'Neil in his notebooks in A.O.'s possession.
- Thursfield.
Collection of T.H. Thursfield v. 'Early Salopian Pipes', Trans Shrops. Arch and Nat Hist Soc. v. VII, 3ser. 1907 pp160-5. Gives most Broseley marks but in idealised form.
- Robinson.
Collection of Mrs H. Robinson now dispersed. Her pen and ink drawings of the pipes mainly from her garden at Benthall, Broseley are in the possession of A.O.
- Mould line.
C. 1800-1820 the mould line left on pipes at the base of the spur (referring mainly to Type 13G) stopped being trimmed off, presumably to save labour.

Dear Sir,

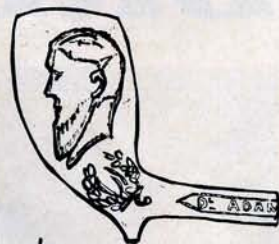

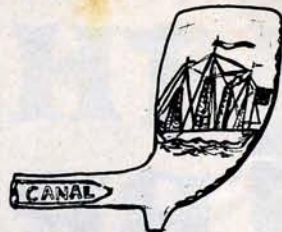

Could you please give me any assistance in identifying a clay pipe I found recently in Colchester. As you can see from my sketch it depicts on one side an old steamship and on the other side the head of a man.

The portion of stem remaining has on one side the name DL Adam and on the other it has the word "Canal". I have been unable to find out if this is the name of the pipe maker, or if it is the name of the man depicted on the pipe. If that is the case I would be interested to know what the pipe commemorates and would be obliged if anyone could let me know.

Yours sincerely,
L. Evans.
