GROUP "B" GROUP "A" GROUP "A" GROUP "B"

We have a collection of 14 spurs: a slight difference in the length and width of the spur at the junction with the bowl puts them into two groups, A & B. All I would think are early or middle 19th C. The initials come out as follows:- Group "A" ♀ B L and B with the L reversed.

Group "B" - L B both reversed and BL both reversed

All they suggest to me is a mould maker with little pride in his work. Do they mean anything to you. I suppose they might be early products of Len Bishop's. If a mould-maker could engrave(?) initials the wrong way round, I suppose he would be just as likely to put them on the wrong halves of the mould, in which case these could all be intended for "BL" since that is the only pair which is the right way round. I'll blow a roll of eight negatives on these if they are of any interest

Dear Mr Oswald,

I am writing with reference to a clay tobacco-pipe which you published in "Clay pipes for the Archaeologist" (Fig.16, No.6) which depicts the Grocer's Company Arms with initials MB, dated to c.1650.

I assume this is the same pipe of which a drawing was sent into Winchester City Museum for identification in September 1973. The pipe was found in the garden of Dr. R.S. Millard, Draper's Cottage, High Street, Odiham, Hants. It was sent to David Atkinson for a further opinion, and in a letter to us he stated that he had discussed it with you.

The pipe has recently been sent into the museum again, and on cleaning it I noticed that the initials were not MB but N followed by B, R or K.

I would be grateful if you have any further information of this type of pipe, and whether any others have turned up since your publication in 1975.

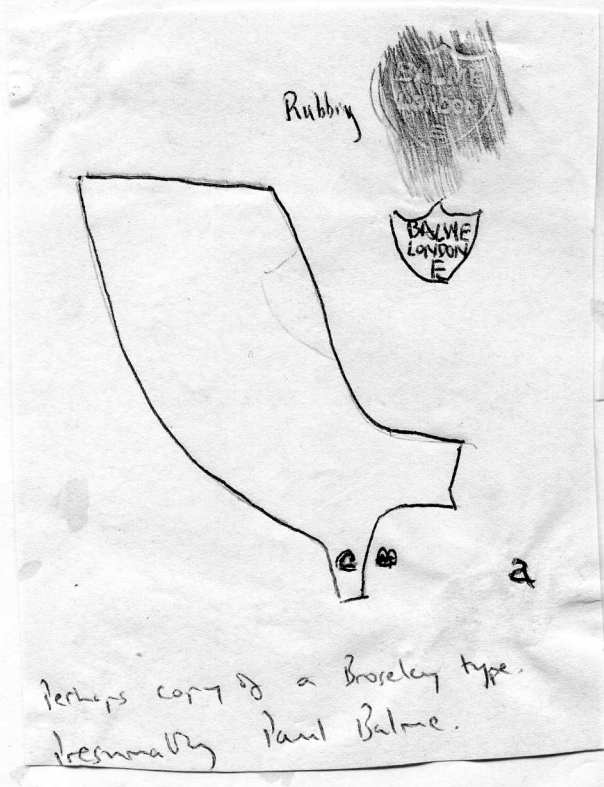

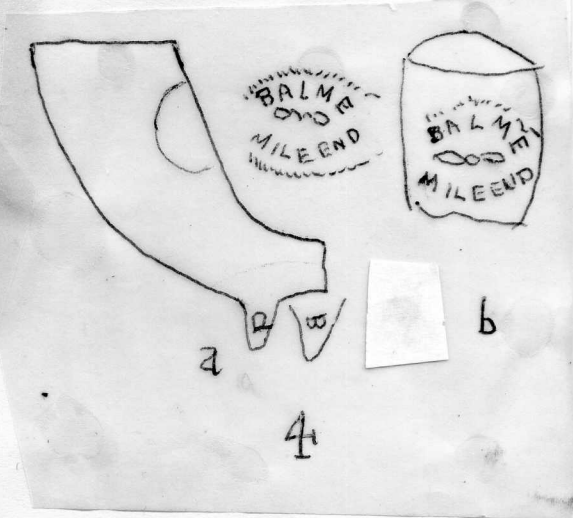

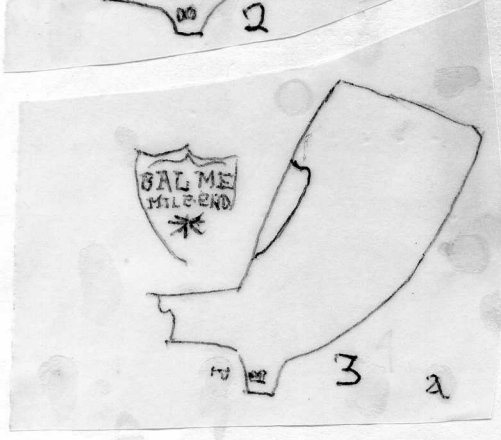

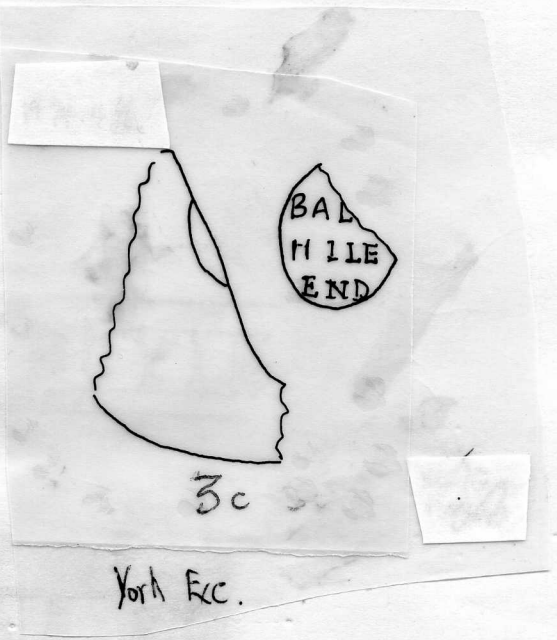

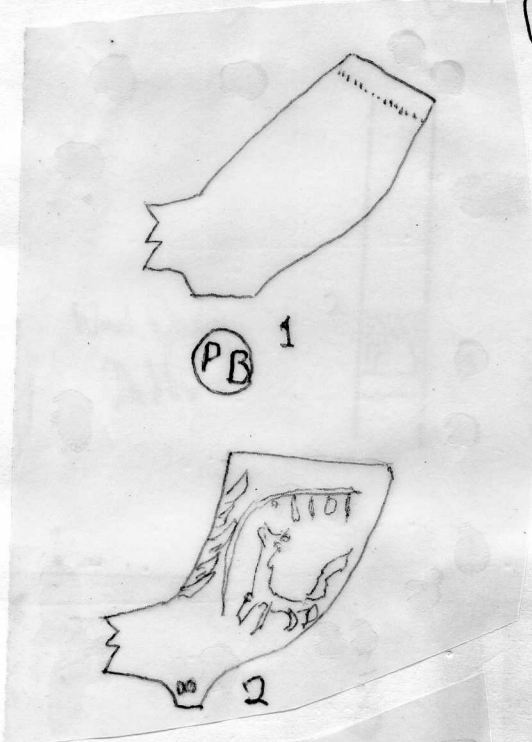

Yours sincerely,

Karen Parker

I have just been through the collection from the 1973 Upper River Street at Southampton and it has brought to my attention a new type of Armorial, which I think is by Roger Browne.
 It is a large shield, (with) large letters, names, arms and found on the large R/B, and the small shield on the inside. The design of all the designs up the shield line, a shield of which I think you can see the design is a shield plain terminated by a small shield of which is a small shield.

From D.P. Atkinson

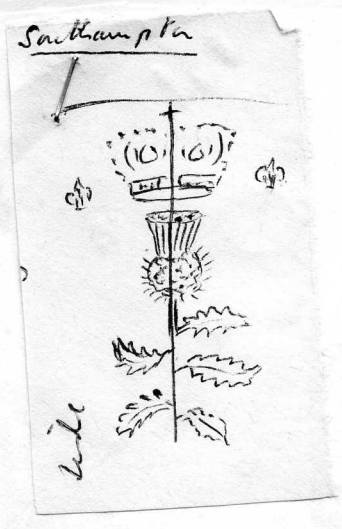

D.P. Atkinson

(28)

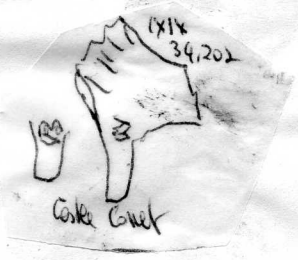

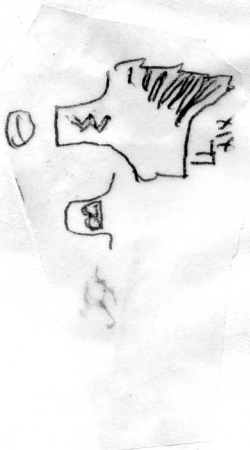

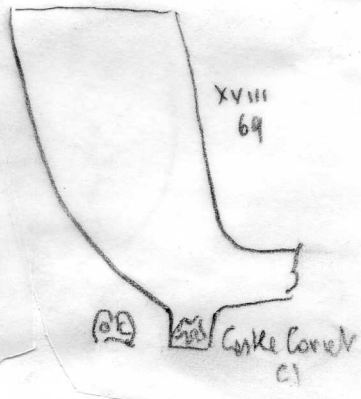

I have just been through the material from the 1973 Upper Bagle Street excavations at Southampton, and it has produced a new type of Armorial, probably made by Roger Browne.

There are three moulds, (~~two~~) large ones with flower arms and forward spin. One has large R/B, another small R/B and a third no initials. The feature of all is the design up the mould line, a sketch of which I attach. As you can see the design is of a thistle plant surmounted by a crown on each side of which is a small fleur-de-lis. perhaps from records only. In addition I got a small brass object found on Putney foreshore which Mrs London said is a pipe stamper c 1700, and I think it must be, and a rather fine brass stamper as illustrated. The Museum hasn't seen this & I am wondering whether it could also be for pipes. You & Atkinson illustrate similar designs c 1680-1700 but on the other hand this is a craftsman-made article with a detachable seal & I suppose customers could have had their own initials ordered as required for a letter seal. Whatever it is, it's a nice piece.
